

Mexico, tradition and color

Mexico is among the largest countries in the world, with a cultural diversity of landscapes and climates that enchants visitors. Its history is divided into three intertwined stages. The first dating back to Pre-Hispanic times and encompassing a great diversity of cultures settled in Mesoamerica. This period ended with the arrival of the Spaniards and the establishment of the viceroyalty of New Spain, which brought with it a cultural mix that prevails today. Finally, upon achieving independence from the Spanish crown, Mexico became a country that generate its own identity; however, each fact permeated its image.

It is impossible to think of Mexico as a sober country; on the contrary, all thinks of the colorful textiles, the joy of the regional dances, the handicrafts decorated with attractive colors, the patron saint festivals that show the syncretism derived from the mixture left by the native people, the Spaniards and the heirs of that miscegenation, who in the search for identity laid the foundations of what today are the Mexican traditions. Living testimony of the values, beliefs and knowledge of the society that transcend from generation to generation and are manifested in a myriad of productions and rites that dazzle and inspire nationals and foreigners, who fascinated by the colorful essence of Mexico have captured it in a variety of artistic and cultural expressions.
